Title: New Technology Tracks Residential Care Facility Laundry

Tunstall Healthcare has launched the RFID garment identification solution for residential care facilities in Australia.

The RFID garment identification is a small button that is discretely attached to resident's garments to ensure clothing is properly distributed after laundering.

RFID buttons can be programmed with up to 200 characters, allowing a residents' name and other important information, such as detergent sensitivities and other skin or contagious conditions to be discretely included.

The RFID garment identification solution provides a dignified alternative to writing names or sewing labels into resident's garments and ensures clothes that are often given to residents as gifts are always returned to their owner.

RFID is also suitable for dementia care facilities where residents may not always be able to identify their laundry, but become distressed if they see somebody else wearing their clothing.

Only 11mm in diameter, the RFID garment identification button is small enough to be inconspicuously attached to garment tags, pockets or hems.

The RFID garment identification button is easily attached using the application tool and can only be removed using the removal tool.

Garment data is easily accessed by swiping across the RFID hand held reader or RFID desktop reader.

RFID garment identification is a discrete solution that ensures residents maintain their identity and experience minimal distress by always having their own clothing safely returned to them.
